9/15/2015 12:54:40	Often	Often	Sometimes	Never	Yes	I would use it for the start of the migration of a legacy or existing project. After that I don't imagine that I would keep needing to use it.

9/15/2015 13:23:04	Often	Sometimes	Sometimes	Often	No	I wouldn't use this, but this would be an amazing tool for people who are still learning SASS. They can code in CSS first, then convert it to SASS - then they would be able to learn from their own code.
9/15/2015 13:43:19	Often	Never	Often	Never	No	Obviously the prime target for it would be when rebuilding an existing site, but that's something I only do very rarely.
9/15/2015 13:46:34	Often	Never	Often	Never	No	Auto generated code is dirty and most of the times is useless.

9/15/2015 14:02:36	Often	Sometimes	Never	Never	Yes
9/15/2015 14:17:39	Never	Often	Never	Never	Yes	By "SASS", I hope you mean Sassy CSS, aka SCSS, aka Sass. That's what I use, not the old Sass syntax.
9/15/2015 14:20:54	Often	Sometimes	Often	Never	Yes
9/15/2015 14:22:23	Sometimes	Sometimes	Often	Never	No
9/15/2015 14:46:57	Never	Often	Never	Never	No	I never want to have to write CSS again, but I'm very interested in the idea of a tool that could logically minify stylesheets.
9/15/2015 14:53:58	Sometimes	Sometimes	Sometimes	Never	No	I prefer to separate my code into components. I haven't had yet issues with a bit of duplication in css. Having css for a specific component makes it a lot easier to develop and maintain without stepping on each others toes. I've never had issues with css size or maintenance (yet).
9/15/2015 14:58:12	Often	Never	Never	Never	No
9/15/2015 15:08:31	Sometimes	Never	Never	Never	No	I used LESS/SASS on past projects and found it counter-productive : without extra caution, it is easy to produce large and complex CSS, where writing CSS by hand forces to make more careful decisions.
9/15/2015 15:11:41	Sometimes	Often	Never	Never	No
9/15/2015 15:16:34	Never	Never	Never	Never	No	I use Stylus.
9/15/2015 15:39:36	Sometimes	Never	Sometimes	Never	No
9/15/2015 15:49:02	Often	Often	Never	Never	No	There are multiple "css2sass" converters (such as http://css2sass.herokuapp.com) that do a fair job. I'm not sure that another tool would be useful or easier than that unless it did a better job of outputting nice Sass.

9/15/2015 17:08:52	Sometimes	Often	Never	Never	No	Re: the last question: It's tough to say. A better answer for me would probably be "Maybe". It all depends on context and what problem it solved for me. I'd be curious to understand more around th

9/16/2015 0:27:32	Sometimes	Often	Sometimes	Never	Yes	I generally develop in SASS (SCSS to be exact). I would likely just use this tool if copying CSS from an online example or open source.
